Farm Shop Work George M. Brace 2015-06-02 Excerpt from Farm Shop

Work: Practical Manual Training This book is written primarily for pupils taking agriculture in elementary and secondary schools, and for pupils in the practical arts work of schools in rural communities; but it also has suggestions of great merit for farmers and others who have to deal in any way with the varied repair and construction problems of farm and village life. Not until the rural schools realize that their manual training and shop work must be entirely different from that of the city schools will they serve properly the vocational needs of the children who are to spend their lives on the farm or in the village. The aim of the practical arts courses in agricultural communities should be to give the boy at least an elementary experience in every form of manual work required to make an independent and successful farmer on his home acres. Such training will make the farm more attractive. It will also equip the farmer for more successful work in agriculture, both because he is prepared to meet the everyday demands of his calling and because he is saved the time and expense of relying on the village mechanic for much that the school should prepare him to do. The Farm Workshop - With Information on Tools and Buildings

Herbert A. Shearer 2016-08-26 This book comprises a handy little guide on maintaining a farm workshop, with information on the tools and buildings required for a productive workshop. Written in clear, understandable language and including simple instructions and helpful illustrations, this book constitutes a handy resource for anyone with an interest in setting up a farm workshop. It will make for a worthy addition to collections of agricultural literature. The chapters of this book include:

'Farm Shop and Implement House', 'Shop Tools', 'Woodworking Bench', 'Woodworking Tools', 'Farm Grindstone', 'Blacksmith Shop', 'Profitable

Home Repair Work', etcetera. We are proud to republish this antique book, now complete with a new introduction on agricultural tools and machinery.

Shop Work for Farm Boys Milam Frank Thurmond 2018-01-11 Excerpt from Shop Work for Farm Boys: Shop Tools, Hardware, Rope, Harness, Sheet Metal and Soldering, Blacksmithing, Plumbing, Concrete, Figuring

Bills of Materials There are thousands of boys throughout the country studying agriculture. They are constantly reminded that they must keep up with the times if they are to be successful. They face the farm shop problems daily. They need to be taught how to do these jobs and do them correctly. Farm boys are naturally inclined to be mechanical. This, no doubt, has come about by the early training of parents who have taught boys how to work with their hands. Excerpt from Farm Shop Work in Pennsylvania: A Study of Repair and

Construction Work as Carried on by Farmers, and as Practiced in the Vocational Agriculture Schools of Pennsylvania With the growth of vocational agriculture in the secondary schools there has developed, especially within the last few years, a widespread interest in the problem of the farm shop. State supervisors of agriculture, and men in charge of teacher training work in agricultural education are zealous in giving impetus to the movement. It is recognized, in the first place, that there are a multiplicity of aims or purposes in the minds of teachers giving this work. What teachers of farm shop work need most to do at this time is to analyze the subject matter used into its significant elements. This analysis should be made on the basis of relevance to the promotion of a better and more productive agriculture. We ought to know in terms of the region we serve, what kinds of work are most frequently performed, and distinction needs to be made between construction work on the one hand as distinguished from repair work on the other. The following study was made by Professor F. Theodore Struck, and submitted in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the Ph.D. degree at Columbia University. It represents results obtained in large part through a survey made through the pupils pursuing vocational agriculture in every community of the State of Pennsylvania in which vocational agricultural education was given. The object of these local surveys was to find out the exact nature and extent of the kinds of agriculture carried on, and to see what specific kinds of repair and construction work are performed by the successful farmers of these regions. This was desired in order that there might be available a fact basis for determining essential and significant elements that need to be covered in teaching farm shop work. It is felt that this study is of considerable value to teachers and supervisors of farm shop work in Pennsylvania. The Department of Rural Life of The Pennsylvania State College is publishing it with the hope that it may prove of interest and value to teachers of farm shop work, to those concerned with the training of agricultural teachers, and to supervisors and administrators of agricultural education in the several states. About
